

BNP Paribas (BNP FP)

FUNDAMENTAL VIEW ¹

As of 13 May 2024

- BNP's financial strength is based on its strong franchises across retail, commercial and investment banking, particularly in Europe, and its wide business and geographic diversification.
- Profitability is sound and fairly resilient, while asset quality has held up well despite the effects of COVID-19 and the war in Ukraine. However, its operations in Italy (less than 10% of credit exposure) and consumer finance (12% of lending) are potentially riskier.
- Capital ratios look sound, especially in the context of its liquid and relatively low-risk balance sheet. They have improved considerably thanks to the exit from the USA.

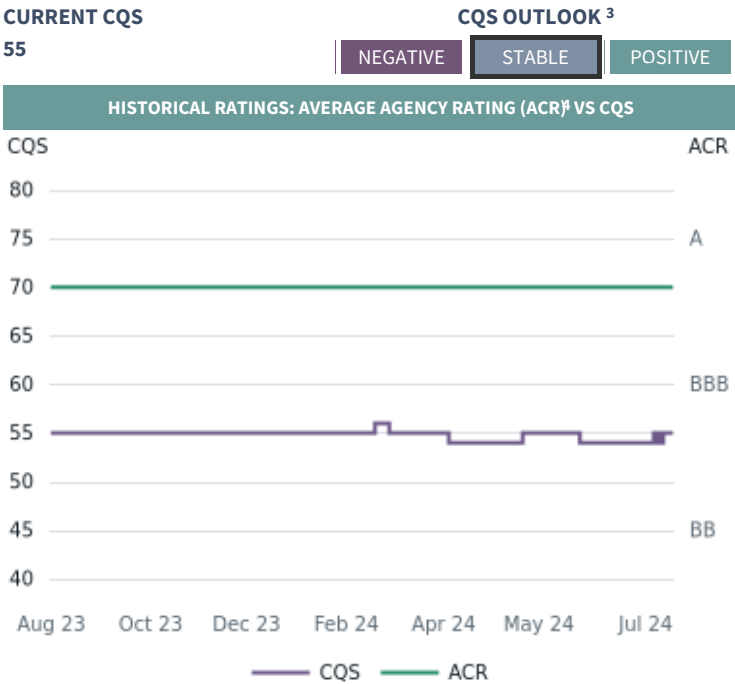

RISKS & CATALYSTS

As of 13 May 2024

- BNP's Polish subsidiary has taken higher provisions for legal risks in its FX mortgage portfolio - these have been absorbed readily, and should have peaked.
- Pressure on margins is high in Personal Finance, and despite the change in product mix - reducing the concentration in Personal loans and credit cards and moving to Auto loans, it was still a difficult FY23.
- BNP Paribas remains the subject of various claims concerning the Madoff matter; amongst other claims. The bank says it has substantial defenses in the face of these claims. Litigation provisions on the balance sheet stood at €1,005 mn on 31 December 2023.
