

PLDT (TEL PM)

FUNDAMENTAL VIEW ¹

As of 14 Aug 2024

- PLDT's FY23 and 1H24 results were stable as expected; we see a modestly improving FY24 credit outlook aided by resilient EBITDA growth and residual PHP 14 bn of tower sales, which could offset persisting high capex and dividends.
- A potential stake sale of the data center business could drive further deleveraging.
- While the spillover of a PHP 33 bn capex overrun to FY24-FY25 could weigh on free cash flows, we draw mild comfort that it was likely not due to fraud but rather a management misstep.

RISKS & CATALYSTS

As of 14 Aug 2024

- Aggressive expansion by new entrant DITO over the next 2-4 years could chew away at PLDT's market share and restrain recoveries in average revenues per user (ARPU).
- PLDT incurs significant capex that has restrained improvements in its leverage metrics and free cash flows. This is worsened by a recent capex overrun that has induced mild corporate governance uncertainties (though these have eased in recent months).
- Consistently high dividend payouts could worsen PLDT's already negative free cash flows.
- PLDT is exposed to $/PHP depreciation risks ($300 mn 2050 bond is fully unhedged).
