

Mizuho Financial Group (8411 JP)

FUNDAMENTAL VIEW ¹

As of 07 Jan 2025

- Mizuho undertook large restructuring charges in FY18 to improve its weak returns. Its performance improved in FY20 and FY21, though a series of Japan IT system failures was a distraction. FY22 was a mixed year due to challenging revenue growth, but FY23 has been much better.
- Mizuho has correctly started to make investments in building its capabilities (Greenhill/Rakuten), which it had shied away from for a 7-8yr period due to low capital levels and a focus on reducing expenses.
- As one of the three megabanks, Mizuho's credit standing benefits from a strong expectation of government support, if needed.

RISKS & CATALYSTS

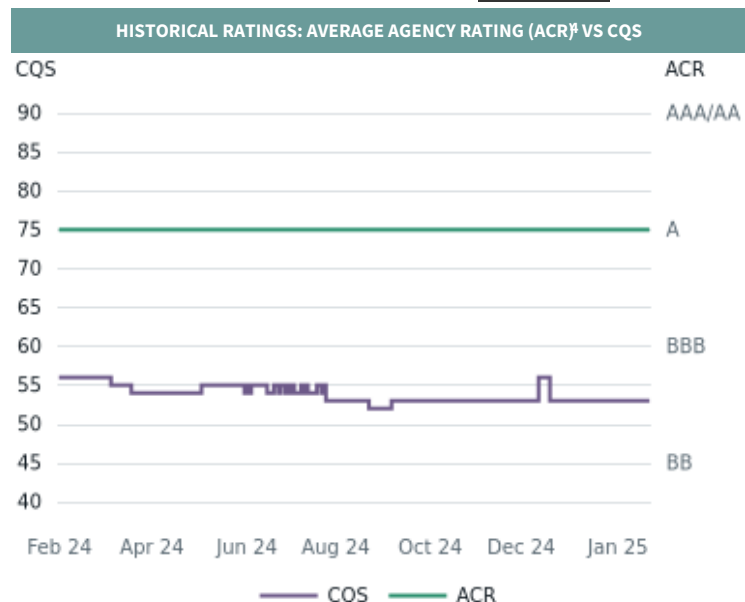

As of 07 Jan 2025

- As mentioned above, Mizuho has correctly started making investments in building its capabilities, which we welcome. More recently, its sales & trading business has done well. Its plans to recycle assets out of Japanese mortgages and low profitability assets into the Americas is sensible.
- Asset quality has been benign and not much affected by COVID-19 up to and throughout FY21; credit costs in FY22 decreased to a low 8 bp of loans and moved marginally up to 11 bp in FY23. This is much lower than the other two megabanks, but so are its spreads.
- The CET1 ratio (fully Basel III compliant and ex-security gains) is 1.8% above the 8% regulatory minimum, which is fairly low level but acceptable given benign asset quality.

BUSINESS DESCRIPTION

As of 07 Jan 2025

- Mizuho is just about the third largest by asset size among Japan's three megabanks. It was formed in 2000 through the merger of the former "City" banks, Fuji and Dai-Ichi Kangyo, and the Industrial Bank of Japan, a provider of long-term industrial credit financed by bond issues.
- Its main units are Mizuho Bank and Mizuho Trust & Banking (focusing on asset management and related services). The group's other main business is Mizuho Securities, a leading player in debt capital markets in Japan and the US.
- It expanded in North America in 2015 by acquiring assets and staff from RBS and has successfully captured more markets and commercial banking business in conjunction with its securities arm. It also acquired Greenhill, a boutique M&A firm, in 2023.
- Mizuho is less diversified than its peers by product segment, and has historically been more corporate focused.
