

Bank Mandiri (BMRI IJ)

FUNDAMENTAL VIEW ¹

As of 27 Mar 2025

- Bank Mandiri (Mandiri) is the largest state-owned bank in Indonesia with 60% government ownership. We therefore expect a very high likelihood of government support in times of need.
- Mandiri's strength had been its large corporate loan portfolio, which has allowed the bank to book lower credit costs compared to its peers over the pandemic. Mandiri is well capitalised, in line with the other Indonesian banks that have relatively high CET1 ratios in the region.

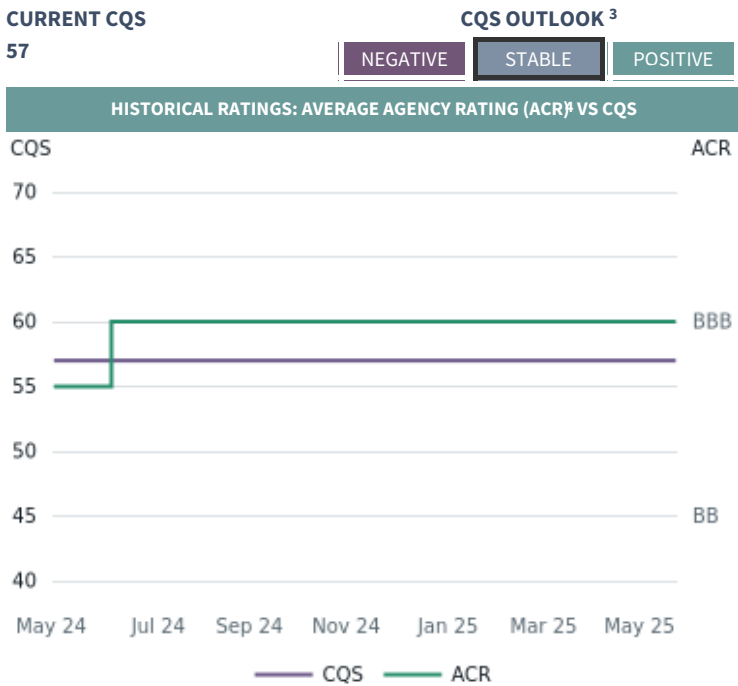

RISKS & CATALYSTS

- The liquidity environment has tightened again since Q4 which puts strain NIMs and loan growth. The LDR has reached a tight level (98%), and the outlook remains challenging given the high USDIDR volatility and seasonally tight liquidity in the first half.
- While Indonesia's growth is projected at a reasonable ~5% in 2025 and could pickup over the medium term under the Prabowo administration, current weak investor sentiment towards Indonesia macro over growth slowdown, weak state finances, and policy uncertainty under the Prabowo administration will weigh on spreads. We are cautious of higher dividend payouts under the new government to fund its more aggressive fiscal policies.
- There is asset quality stress in the mass retail segment. Asset quality however has trended better than peers due to its loan book and growth focus being predominantly on large corporates, and capital is solid with a >19% CET1 ratio.
