

Toronto Dominion (TD CN)

FUNDAMENTAL VIEW ¹ As of 30 Dec 2024

- TD's credit profile is supported by its scale, profitability, and history of strong credit quality, particularly in its core domestic banking footprint. TD also sees significant revenue contributions from the growing capital markets business and wealth management. U.S. retail banking has scale and is an important part of the overall franchise, but profitability will remain challenged.
- We expect TD to continue to manage capital levels conservatively given profitability and regulatory pressures stemming from BSA/AML issues.

RISKS & CATALYSTS As of 18 Dec 2024

- Toronto Dominion has a strong, largely retail-driven deposit base in both Canada and the U.S., which should mitigate the potential for a liquidity event.
- The remediation efforts related to the U.S. business represent a medium term headwind for TD's overall earnings profile, but one we view as manageable given the strength of the Canadian and Wholesale banking parts of the franchise. We expect TD to maintain strong capital and liquidity positions throughout the remediation period.
- With the CEO transition, TD is conducting a strategic review of its business priorities and capital allocation, and therefore suspended its medium-term profitability targets. Management expects to provide an update to the medium-term targets in 2H25.
- We view real estate-related risk in Canada as manageable for TD given low LTV of exposures in vulnerable markets and conservative underwriting, as well as significantly lower interest rates in Canada compared to the start of 2024.
