

Petron (PCOR PM)

FUNDAMENTAL VIEW ¹

As of 27 May 2025

- Petron's FY24 results improved slightly; we expect Petron's credit metrics to remain flat to improve slightly in FY25 owing to higher capex and flattish % YoY EBITDA growth amid a single-digit YoY decline in sales volume growth though partially supported by lower crude oil input costs
- About two-third of its total revenues are derived from the Philippines and are indexed to Dubai crude prices, which allows for smooth cost pass-throughs and good insulation from crude price volatility.
- Free cash flows are typically negative due to inventory fluctuations that outweigh low capex.

RISKS & CATALYSTS

As of 27 May 2025

- Petron cannot fully pass on higher crude oil input costs to customers in Malaysia.
- Petron operates in low-margin business (EBITDA margins ~5%) and maintains elevated credit metrics.
- Petron is highly dependent on its Limay petroleum refining complex that makes up two-thirds of its total refining capacity (67%). Any events that disrupt the refinery's operations could adversely affect Petron's total revenues.
