

Hyundai Motor (005380 KS)

FUNDAMENTAL VIEW ¹

As of 22 May 2025

- Hyundai Motor Group posted solid 1Q25 results and maintained its FY25 sales and consolidated operating profit guidance. While we continue to expect lower FY25 automotive profitability owing to tariff impacts on its US vehicle sales, which account for 25% of its global unit sales, we expect the tariff headwind to be partially offset by favorable currency and higher financial services profitability along with support by the South Korean government for the automotive sector. We expect these tariff mitigation factors to alleviate our previous concerns regarding potential negative rating actions.

RISKS & CATALYSTS

- Hyundai and Kia both maintained FY25 sales and consolidated operating profit guidance – which did not include the potential impact of tariffs – citing both uncertainty surrounding tariff implementation, especially for USMCA-compliant parts, and strategies to mitigate the tariff impact. Both companies called out the likelihood of price increases to mitigate the tariff impact, while Hyundai management highlighted additional mitigation strategies in their earnings conference call. On a combined basis, the Hyundai Motor Group (HMG) targets FY25 wholesale unit growth of 2% to 7.4 mn units, revenue growth of 5% to 6%, and a consolidated operating profit margin of 8.8% at the midpoint of the range for YoY margin contraction of 40 bp.
- The company's FY25 consolidated operating profit could also benefit from higher captive finance profit and favorable currency impacts related to the weak Korean won, two factors that boosted its 1Q25 profit. The South Korean government announced emergency support for the auto sector, including financial aid and tax cuts to mitigate the impact of US tariffs on imported vehicles.
