

Woori Financial Group (WF US)

FUNDAMENTAL VIEW ¹

As of 06 May 2025

- Woori FG's performance record had been less consistent than some of its more commercially focused peers but improved in FY21-22. Its FY23 performance lagged behind its peers, affected by not only the kitchen sinking provisioning exercise but also uniquely amongst the FGs, taking a hit on its other non-interest income. It posted peer-leading profit growth in FY24, partially thanks to not having the ELS compensation issue which hit the other three FGs in 1Q24, but 1Q25 performance was softer due to the same reason.
- Asset quality used to be a strength with the lowest NPL ratios and credit costs among the four FGs but has deteriorated since 2Q23, and we no longer see a gap with the other FGs.
- Capital standing is a relative weakness with the CET 1 ratio at 12.4% compared to above 13% at peers.

RISKS & CATALYSTS

As of 06 May 2025

- Woori FG was for many years majority-owned by the Korean government via the Deposit Insurance Corporation (KDIC), but KDIC has steadily been selling down its shareholding, and Woori purchased and cancelled the remaining shares in 2024. That said, Woori FG remains a large, systemically important bank with strong potential government backing if needed.
- Woori FG is less diversified than its peers, with most of its earnings coming from the bank and small contributions from the card and leasing businesses. The group has accelerated its M&A pace this year, relaunching securities business and in the process of acquiring insurance targets.
- Its CET 1 ratio is ~1% behind the other three FGs. Management plans to improve it to 12.5% by 2025-year end and 13% in the mid-long term.
